Vance also referred to his children, saying that he was the father of four, who would suffer were he imprisoned and pleading that he wanted to be at liberty to take care of them. His state-ment that his children would suffer and be disgraced if he were sent to jall for a long term, brought about the for a long term, brought about the caustic comment and the imposition of the maximum penalty from Judge Lewchildren will suffer all the days of their life for the crime of which you stand convicted The sentence of the court is that you be confined in the state prison at hard labor for a period of twenty years."

Before passing sentence, Judge Lewis, with no sparing words, arraigned the defendant in a manner that caused him to wince. The court refused to entertain the suggestion offered by the defendant that the wife-beating oc-curred in the heat of passion, and the inference obtained from the court's remarks that he thought the beat-ing was the outburst of brutal instinct. The court also gave the inference that, while the defendant might not have administered the poison, and that while the deceased wife might have taken the poison herself, yet in the latter case she might have been driven to that preference rather than be subjected to the life with the defendant.

Vance received his sentence with a shudder, and sank into his seat with the air of the man weary with abandoned hope. While a prison sentence was anticipated, it was plainly evident that Vance did not expect to receive the maximum penalty under the maximum penalty under the charge. Whether he will accept his present sentence, grateful that he has escaped the death chair, or not, has not been announced. Under the twenty-year sentence, with good behavior and earning his credit marks, his time can be cut down to ten years and ten months.

In the meantime he still has a motion before the court for a new Under agreement of the counse this will come up for hearing, January 7. Pending this, however, he will begin today the serving of his twenty-year
